

November 4, 2007

[To Deb]

Looks like an immature coot (as opposed to an old coot). Here's the description from my bird book: gray black overall; white, chicken-like bill with dark ring around tip; reddish spot on white forehead shield; long, greenish yellow legs; lobbed toes; red eyes. Immature: lighter body color; darker bill and legs; lacks prominent forehead shield.

They are water birds. We see them on the river in the winter.

Did you create the website?